Походження etnosu кримських караїмів та трансформація караїзму в герменевтичному колі інтерпретації історії

Ю. С. Бараш
доктор економічних наук, професор

Т. І. Власова
доктор філософських наук, професор
ORCID: 0000–0001–5040–5733
ResearcherID: D-3841–2016
vasovat2@gmail.com

Л. В. Марценюк
доктор економічних наук, доцент
ORCID: 0000–0003–4121–8826
ResearcherID: N-3917–2019
rwinform1@ukr.net

Т. Ю. Чаркіна
кандидат економічних наук, доцент
ORCID: 0000–0001–6202–0910
ResearcherID: Q-4593–2019
charkina@i.ua

Дніпровський національний університет
залізничного транспорту імені академіка В. Лазаряна
бул. Лазаряна, 2, м. Дніпро, 49010, Україна

Анотація. Мета статті. Концептуальна реконструкція виникнення etnosu кримських караїмів і визначення чинників, що відіграють головну роль у формуванні їхньої віри – караїзму. Методологія. Аналітичні методи дослідження зумовлені специфікою об‘єкта, вивчення якого вимагає комплексного міждисциплінарного підходу із зауваженням як прийомів герменевтичної інтерпретації, так і порівняльно-історичного підходу. Основні результати. Аналіз походження etnosu кримських караїмів у контексті формування їхньої віри – караїзму, амбівалентно представленого в інтерпретації історії цієї етнічної групи, підтверджує гіпотезу виникнення etnosu кримських караїмів як тюрків і обґрунтовує авторську ідею про витоки їхньої віри – біблієзм.

Стислі висновки. Кримські караїми (караї) були до 1 ст. н. е. тенгріанцями, які пізніше через етнічні групи Криму прийняли чистий біблієзм. Вчення Анана лише доповнило біблієзм, не змінивши його основної ідеї. Практичне значення пов’язане з акцентуалізацією наукового інтересу до історичної спадщини караїмів як одного з найменш численних etnosів в умовах «ризиків» і «загроз» глобалізації.

Ключові слова: глобалізм; релігійна амбівалентність; ідентичність; біблієзм; іудаїзм.

Происхождение этноса крымских караимов и трансформация караизма в герменевтическом круге интерпретации истории

Ю. С. Бараш
доктор экономических наук, профессор

Т. И. Власова
доктор философских наук, профессор
ORDID: 0000–0001–5040–5733
ReseachrID: D-3841–2016
vasovat2@gmail.com

Л. В. Марценюк
доктор экономических наук, доцент
ORDID: 0000–0003–4121–8826
ReseachrID: N-3917–2019
rwinform1@ukr.net

Т. Ю. Чаркина
кандидат экономических наук, доцент
ORDID: 0000–0001–6202–0910
ReseachrID: Q-4593–2019
charkina@i.ua

Днепровский национальный университет железнодорожного транспорта имени академика В. Лазаряна,
ул. Лазарянa, 2, г. Днепр, 49010, Украина

Аннотация. Цель статьи. Концептуальная реконструкция возникновения этноса крымских караимов и определение факторов, играющих главную роль в формировании их веры – караизма. Методология. Аналитические методы исследования обусловлены спецификой объекта, требующего комплексного междисциплинарного подхода с привлечением как приемов герменевтической интерпретации, так и сравнительно-исторического подхода. Основные результаты. Анализ происхождения этноса крымских караимов в контексте формирования их веры – караизма, амбивалентно представленного в интерпретации истории этой этнической группы подтверждает гипотезу этноса крымских караимов как тюрков и обосновывает авторскую идею об истоках их веры – библеизме. Краткие выводы. Крымские караимы (караи) являлись до 1 в н.э. тенгрианцами, которые позднее через этнические группы Крыма приняли чистый библеизм. Учение Анана лишь дополнило библеизм, не изменив его основной идеи. Практическое значение связано с акцентуализацией научного интереса к историческому наследию караимов как одного из самых малочисленных этносов в условиях «рисков» и «угроз» глобализации. Оригинальность. Статья является одной из первых работ в украинской науке, где представлено интегральное видение истории этноса крымских караимов и происхождения их веры – караизма. Научная новизна. Основанием религии караимов является библеизм, возникший за 500 лет до появления иудаизма, следовательно, караизм нельзя считать сектой иудаизма. Ключевые слова: глобализм; религиозная амбивалентность; идентичность; библеизм; иудаизм.

Поступила в редколлегию 19.03. 2020
Прорецензирована 17.04.2020
Рекомендована в печать 06.05.2020
The origin of the Crimean Karaims and transformations of Karaism in the hermeneutic circle of history interpretation

Yu. S. Barash
Sc. D. (Economics), Professor

T. I. Vlasova
Sc. D. (Philosophy), Professor
ORCID: 0000–0001–5040–5733
ResearcherID: D-3841–2016
vasovat2@gmail.com

L. V. Martseniuk
Sc. D. (Economics), Associate Professor
ORCID: 0000–0003–4121–8826
ResearcherID: N-3917–2019
rwinform1@ukr.net

T. U. Charkina
Ph. D. (Economics), Associate Professor
ORCID: 0000–0001–6202–0910
ResearcherID: Q-4593–2019
charkina@i.ua

Dnipro National University of Railway Transport named after Academician V. Lazaryan
2 Lazaryan st., Dnipro, 49010, Ukraine

Abstract. The aim of the article is the conceptual reconstruction of the origin of the Crimean Karaims as an ethnic group and determination of the factors which played the main role in the formation of their faith – the Karaism. The actual topicality of the theme under analysis is stipulated by the specific features of the research object, which calls for the complex interdisciplinary analysis including both the approaches of the hermeneutic interpretation and the comparative historical methods. The interdisciplinary dialogue serves its goal in this paper, involving different academic subjects in one attempt at the «whole» analysis. This methodology is so important in this case because the objective covers the analysis of the «generalized» vision of the wide problematic field. The latter includes historical-comparative methods, hermeneutic approaches, deconstruction techniques, etc., which can help history and theology communicate in the mutually beneficial dialogue. The main results. The research of the ethnic origin of the Crimean Karaims in the context of the transformations of their faith – the Karaism reveals the ambivalent interpretations of their history and worships. The authors’ conception confirms the hypothesis of the Karaims’ origin as the Turks and substantiates the idea of the Biblicism as a source of their faith.

The Concise Conclusion. The Crimean Karaims (Karai) being the Tengrianists before the 1st century A.D. then adopted the pure Biblicism through the Crimean local ethnic groups. Anan’s teaching having complemented the Biblicism did not change its main ideas. The practical meaning is connected with the accentualization of the scientific interest in the historical heritage of the non-numerous ethnic group – the Karaims under the conditions of the «risks» and «threats» of the globalization processes. The «project» of Man has been constructing the system of values for thousands of years, and nowadays the critically minded postmodern man or woman cannot be free from the absolutes of faith, from the ultimate concepts of philosophy. And namely at this historical stage those obvious criteria can help the postmodern person to perceive that moral law that is the intrinsic value of the human being. The originality. The research problems have not been yet the subject of the special investigation in the

The article is written in accordance with the tasks of the state budget theme 0117U006917 «The theory and methodology of the humanities research under the conditions of the socio-cultural transformations at the beginning of the XXIst century».
Theological reviews of the contemporary approaches to the Judaism. The type of the article. The research is mainly an analytical one with the inclusion of the historical and theological reviews of the contemporary approaches to the theme under analysis.

1. The formulation of the problem

The normalization of postmodern transformations, which has been widely discussed lately by scientists of different schools, includes several key variables among which the «absolutes» of a person’s life take a special place. The latter is not only because of the increased risks of the «postmodern conditions», but mostly because the «old truths» have been abandoned in postmodernity. Here one word appears that summarizes the postmodern turn, and this word is hermeneutics in its meaning of the interpretation theory (Caputo, J., 2013, p. 200). The researchers believe that each hermeneutic conception creates a wide field for the arbitrary and subjective interpretations, however while speaking about hermeneutic methods at the end of the 20th century, scientists address history and theology more often than other theoretical spheres. This fact can be explained by the practices of hermeneutics which have been dealing with religious texts for centuries. Having different approaches to literature in its broad meaning, hermeneutics has not changed its priorities up to now. It is important that in every conception of interpretation a definite type of philosophical consciousness is reflected. T. Adorno, following the ideas coming back to Hegel, writes that the social act of the perception of the work of art is stipulated by the peculiarities of the cultural tradition; the expression of the essence of culture on the whole (Adorno, T., 2002). For us, Adorno’s idea is very important because many critics suppose that at the beginning of the 21st century it is T. Adorno who symbolizes the font of inspiration as a leader of the intellectual thought in the broad postmodernist field (Müller-Doohm, S., 2009). However, while answering the question about what hermeneutics is, scientists accentuate the idea that in the historical view hermeneutics is traditionally considered in the context of the Bible’s interpretation which have its roots in «time and space» (Thistlethwaite, A., 2009).

Nowadays, interpretation structures our modus vivendi in the representation of our «Self» both in the consciousness and practices under conditions of our everyday life, but the point is that hermeneutical analysis is still in the focus of the research of the church texts.

As for the conditions of our changing world, no doubt, they are determined by globalization. But if only 15–20 years ago the sum of the social changes covered the meaning of the transformations in the centrifugal direction, today these processes more and more often reflect the centripetal movement of the operative capabilities of the actors’ control over the historical situation. Recently the «pendulum» of globalization has oscillated in the opposite direction – towards integration, to the traditional values and cultural wealth of both large and small ethnic groups. The peoples’ reactions, as for the intervention of more powerful, or opposite, cultures, have become more painful, and the failure of the multiculturalism doctrine can serve as a vivid example. On the other hand, a statement about the great «overloads» of the small ethics groups and their cultures sounds as an axiom today, and it appears valid because they lead to their complete disappearance. No doubt, in those processes the loss of the ethnic identity plays a key role. The latter mainly concerns minor ethnic groups because it is directly connected with the ambivalent tendencies of the replacement of the sociocultural identities, the formation of the new identities and the restoration of the ruined ones. It is significant that desymbolization of the cultural integrity of the society along with the weakness of personal integrity means a loss of the collective objectives and values. The processes of the destruction of values and radicalization of the collective identity represent the crisis of rendering sociocultural and existential experience, which in its turn gives birth to individuals who have lost «life absolutes», behaviour standards, in fact, basic moral systems.

Thus, the issues of history in the problematic field of the religious life of such small ethnic group as the Karaims acquire special importance: a number of the discreet identity components are disappearing, and the identification according to the definite ethnic group its history and religion is becoming a determining factor in the crucial sociocultural transformations at the beginning of the XXI century.

2. The historiography and discussions

At the end of the 20th century the discussions about the globalization problems were becoming rather acute, and the critical attitude to the concepts of the neoliberal globalization were accentuated. In the 21st century scientists focus their attention on the comparison of the globalization processes with the possibilities of the sustained development of the contemporary world. The researchers claim that globalization and integration have a positive impact on the world’s development, on the one hand, while on the other, they have given birth to the serious problems, and struggling them proves to some states a difficult task to cope with (Weber, S., 2001).

Keywords: globalization; religious ambivalence; identity; the Biblicism; the Judaism.

However, we live in the epoch when individualism as an organizing principle of culture «has survived» God, that is why so many people put the personal interests in the center of their life’s position (both in private and public life). And all these are directly connected with specific morals and general morality, i.e. religion. In this context it is worth recollecting the famous citation from F. Nietzsche’s «Twilight of the Idols»: when one gives up the Christian faith, one pulls the right to Christian morality out from under one’s feet. This morality is by no means self-evident… Christianity is a system… By breaking one main concept out of the faith in God, one breaks the whole (Nietzsche, F., 2012, p. 104). It is important that F. Nietzsche mentions in the «Antichrist» that in primitive Christianity one finds only concepts of a Judaic-Semitic character, ideas which have been badly mauled by the Church (Nietzsche, F., 2016, p. 50).

In problematic and conflict situations the connection between morality and religion manifests itself distinctly, the «God’s eye» is closed for many individuals and the «golden rule» is forgotten. In this connection it is significant to stress that on the whole the ethic life is conservative, we resist the changes in the ethic norms; fundamental ethic norms are close to our hearts. Here we should recollect Kant’s supreme categorical imperative and its link with the old «golden rule». It is precisely in this context scientists see their hopes for the future, otherwise the «passion for the perfect life» will become pure ideology, and moral values will disappear in the world of consumerism and hedonism.

The end of philosophy, proclaimed by J. Derrida, explicitly means the end of universal truths. The conceptual multiplicity expands the problematic field of risks and threats in postmodernity. The ambiivalence of the definitions against the background of the indefinite conceptual borders puts an accent on the significance of the critical reflection of the ultimate concepts, which construct «the moral law inside man». On the other hand, the position of the subjective interpreting suggests not only subjective ideas but mankind itself in its historical relativism. It is known, the specific features of the phenomenon of the «new world order» occupy the top «troubles» of modernity, and it is mainly because the absolutes of the moral life are subjected to the ideological attacks both in science and culture. However, scientists intend to discover and determine some «supreme» human features, the supreme values, adherent to man, and it is obvious that thinking about them is impossible outside studying the basic philosophical notions, absolutes and religious grounds of the moral life of man or woman.

Discussing the background of the Karaim’s representation in history and theology it is appropriate to mention here that the Karaim’s origin has been in the focus of historians’ debates for two centuries at least. The Karaites (Karaims) who are defined as an “ethnoreligious minority among the Ashkenazim, the Turks, and the Slavs” in one of the latest books (Kizilov, M., 2008), have been mentioned by scientists and more often by non-professionals in different spheres: history, cultural studies, theology in general, and Judaism, in particular. The interest to the origin and formation of the religion of the Crimean Karaims was increasing during the whole 20th century. At the beginning of the third millennium scientists, as a rule, put an accent on the Karaim’s faith as the monotheistic religion with its dogmas, traditions, spiritual hierarchy, which is the religion of Iranians, Arabs, Jews, Greeks, Ethiopians, and Karaims. On the territory of Ukraine, it is the religion of the ethnic Karaims and it is noted that the Crimean Karaims is one of the scantiest world’s peoples, in fact, they are an ethnic and cultural relic. In Ukraine there are about 1300 Karaims and most of them live in their historical homeland, in the Crimea. As for the Crimean Karaims, the names of their ethnos and religion are identical, but sometimes there occurs an error, when the ethnic Karaims who are only the Crimean Karaims (Turks), and the Karaims in their faith are considered identical.

The difficulty of finding the «absolute» true answers lies mainly in the complexity of the issues under analysis, in the complicated character of the interdisciplinary approaches, which involve history, theology, anthropology, cultural studies and linguistics. And, of course, because of the contradictory views as for the origin of the Karaim’s faith (Karaizm), it is important to touch upon the history of the Crimean Karaims.

3. The aim of the study

The main objective of the given study is to reconstruct the grounds, which stipulate the origin of the Crimean Karaims, and to determine the factors, which play the main role in the formation of their faith – the Karaism, minding the task of accounting for some certain facts, which are of both ethnic and religious origin.

4. The sources of the investigation

Though there are different approaches to the origin and history of the Crimean Karaims, there is a general tendency to relate the Crimean Karaims to the Turkish group in the Altaic family of the peoples. Their descendants, who first had joined the Huns tribes and then the Khazar tribes, mixed in the Crimea with... the Sarmats, the Alans and the Goths (Karaims’ people encyclopedia, p. 247). M. Kizilov writes that approximately an the end of the 13th century the Karaims moved to the Crimea together with the Tartars (Kizilov, M., 2011, p. 181). But in the «Britannica» it is said that the Karaims is a Jewish sect which came in existence in the early Middle Ages (https://www.britannica.com/place/Israel/Settlement). Those views demonstrate that the problem of the Karaims’ origin should be accentuated too, as scientists represent different ideas about the origin of both the people and their religion. Moreover, there are some ideas presenting quite new views on the problem. For example, V. Rogozha in his recent book claims that the Karaims are the descendants of the Semitic tribes, involved in the civilization process that gave the name to the people that had come. Those people called themselves Karaims which meant «black-headed». V. Rogozha maintains that the people of Karaims came from the land of the «nobble lords».

The author of the book stresses that in his writings he answers the questions that have been unclear because scientists have not been able to determine the locale of the original land of the Karaims (Rogozha, V., 2018).

V. Kotlyar in his preface to Rogozha’s book comments that there are several versions of the Karaims’ origin in his text: the first one states that the Karaims are the descendants of the Khazars who preached the Judaism. The second one is the Cumans-Kipchaks version, according to which the Karaims’ ancestors came from the land captured by Mongols. The next one claims that the Karaims are the Crimean Tartars who came into the Judaism. Then some researchers say that the Karaims are the Jews who did not keep the «blood purity» because they had stayed in the mids of the Polovostu and the Crimean Tartars but who kept their religious groundings. The next one declares that the Karaims were pure-blood Jews who did not accept the Talmud version of the Judaism. According to the sixth version the Jews came to the Crimea in the 6th century B.C. together with the army of Persian tsar Cambyses. They took the languages and the customs of the Turk people which lived in the Crimea but kept the pure «before-Talmud» Judaism; the Karaims did not adopt the Judaism from the Khazars, but the Khazars did it from the Karaims. As for the seventh version, the Karaims were children of the mixed marriages of the Khazars and the Jews in which the mother was a Khazar and the father was a Jew. The eighth version declares that in the 6th century B.C. not the Jews came to the Crimea with the tsar Cambyses but the Indo-Iranian ancestors of the Karaims – the Hittites. The Hittites were assimilated with the Alans, and after the Crimea had been won by the Khazars, a part of the Alans mixed with their conquerors and adopted their official religion – the Judaism, later, – the Karaizm (Kotlyar, Ju., 2018, p. 4–6).

The famous anthropologist Alekseev V.P. writes that the Karaims represent a historical paradox in their combination of the Turk language and the Judaism religion. As the Karaims’ tradition is obviously tenacious, the scientist assumes that only facts should be taken into account though they are not numerous. The first and the most important fact is the Turk language of the Khazars: Khazar names, separate words from the Khazars’ language, etc. The next significant fact is that the state religion in the Khazar land was the Judaism. It is known that after the fall of the Khazar realm a part of the Khazars moved into the Crimea. In the Crimea lived people whose ethnus and language are unknown to us, but their culture is known and manifested in splendid cave towns – Mangyp-Kale, Eski-Kermen, and others. Their physics type is also known, and the anthropologists maintain that if they are set in one row with the Khazars and the Karaims, they will take the extreme position. Thus, V. P. Alekseev claims that the inference is evident: the Karaims are connected with the Khazars through the direct and immediate genetic succession, they are offsprings of the Khazars, not ancient Jews with whom they have no links (Aлексеев, V., 2005, p. 9–15).

Many researchers claim that Karaizm is an independent religion (Karai (The Crimean Karaims). History, cultury, sacred things, 2000); some assume it the sect of the Judaism or put it among the ancient teachings (Adj, M., 1998). The encyclopedia «Britannica» gives such a note: «The Karaites are a Jews sect that emerged in the early middle ages. Like other religious minorities they (Karaites) have their own religious courts and communal organizations. Considered part of Jewish society they have maintained their separate identity by resisting intermarriage and preserving their religious lives based on the Torah as the sole source of religious law» (https://www.britannica.com/place/Israel/Settlement). In Wikipedia the article «Karaite Judaism» has the following statements: «Karaizm is a Jewish religious movement characterized by the recognition of the Jonah alone as its supreme authority in Hahakha… and theology. It is distinct from mainstream Rabbinic Judaism which considers the oral Torah. Karaites maintain that all of the divine commandments handed down to Moses were recorded in the written Torah without additional oral law or explanation. As a result, Karaites Jews do not accept… the oral tradition in the Midrash or Jammed» (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Karaite_Judaism).

The problem, which appears not simple, is further complicated by a large amount of papers and books written by non-professionals, by enthusiastic lovers of history and culture. That is why this article is focused on the sources of the origin and transformation of the religion of the Crimean Karaims with the accent on the scientific analysis and use of the methodolo-
Involving the methods of the complex analysis in the historical and philosophical field is so important because the main question in the line of «risks, threats and crises» has become the anthropological question: «What is man?». Recently philoscipic hermeneutics has made an extensive invasion into the sphere of ontological and gnoseological studies, and the latter allows to use the methods and approaches of those sciences in the attempt to analyze the domain of the «proper humane». While understanding that the problem of the correlation of the interdisciplinary approach and the particular science methods is still open in the Ukrainian science, we accentuate the necessity of the interdisciplinary approach in this research. In our comparison of the methods and ideas we try to focus the analysis on the corresponding cultural and historical contexts, thus we address the historical-comparative methodology.

We assume that this article allows to speak about a systematic analysis because a man is a system-creating factor in the spheres of both philosophy and history, on the whole, – all humanitarian sciences.

5. The main material and the results

As early as the middle of the 19th century an attempt was made to determine a font of Karaims’ religion. The author of an article “Jews – Karaims” drew an interesting conclusion: «They are some descendants of Abraham and observers of Moses’ law known under the name of Karais» (Evrei-karaimy, 1843, p. 263). Then he writes, that the foundation of Karaim, which is pure Bibliizm without any admixtures, by all means goes back to the most ancient times (Evrei- karaimy, 1843, p. 270). The author proceeds that the Crimean Karaims are descendants of the Israeli kingdom, who were taken as captives by Persians; they kept the Bibliizm in the form that had nothing common with the Judaism because it did not admit any comments and interpretations of the Holy Writ. The conclusion made by the author testifies to the fact that Karaims’ religion is more ancient than Judaism, consequently it cannot be its sect.

The question arises why Israeli and Judaics have different religions as they are one and the same ethnic group – the Jews. Contemporary scientists agree with ancient wits concerning the idea that «Israel» and «Judaics» were different tribe formations (Reed, D., 2014, p. 592). They assert, that Joseph and Judas belong to different hereditary lines, and add that Judea, as it seems, was not the Israeli tribe (Mudroch, I., 2019, p. 384).

In the «Britannica» it is said that the Judaism was formed much later, after Israeli mixed with other ethnic groups, and the conclusion could be expressed in the idea that Israeli were not Jews. The history of Israel was very short and then it left the world’s scene. Judea existed longer and gave birth to Judaism, which in its turn gave birth to Zionism. And if Judaism came into existence in 458 B.C., Bibliizm sprang 500 years earlier. Israel rejected the Judaic doctrine of the chosen people and went its own way (htts:www.britannica com/ topic/ Judaism/The Judaic tradition).

After scientists established that in their ethnos the Karaims are descendants of the Turks, namely, the tribe of Karaits, the scientific theory, reported above, came to fiasco. S. Kushul, the Karaim researcher, proposed a new hypothesis, which allowed to remove contradictions that had appeared. She asserts that Karaims took Bibliizm from the local inhabitants of the Crimea who, in their turn, accepted it from Jews – Israelites. It happened approximately in the first century A. D.: grave stones at the cemetery of Balta – Timez prove that supposition (Kushul, S., 1996, p. 1–9).

Murad-Adji in his research of the initial religion of the Turks – the Tengrism paid special attention to the religion of the Crimean Karaims. The scientist stresses that Karaims–Turks are of paramount interest for theologists and historians of religion. He proceeds that Karaims who live in the Crimea and Lithuania are followers of the Old Testament. But can we call them Jews, – asks the researcher, – or they represent more ancient teaching that had come into existence before Christianity and even before Judaism? Murad-Adji agrees with the latter supposition. In the Altai and other Siberian regions where the Turks lived (in no way connected with Palestine), the ancient folk legends still exist, which put scientists at the deadlock, – in fact, they are passages of the Old Testament, its «narrative outline». How could it happen? The first to find them was a Russian missionary, a priest Stefan Landushev who published them in the 19th century. They represent amazing resemblance with the Bible in the narratives about the world creation, creation of man, the fall of man, the true faith and others (Adji, M., 1998).

Even if we take into account that the Tengrism is very close in its essence to the Christianity of the 3rd – 5th centuries, we shall have a question, whether the religion of Israel is a transformed Tengrism, which had come into existence in the Tibet and became monotheistic in the first millennium B. C. History provides similar examples: the Turks’ religion in 301 and 312 A. D. correspondingly was rendered in the transformed way first to the Armenians and then to the Byzantine people.

One more question arises concerning the date when the religion of the Karaims–Turks was first called Karaizm. Professor A. Dubisky writes that in the end of the 8th century opponents of the Talmudism found their defender – Anan Ben David, born in Basra in the South of Iraq. By all means he can be considered a reformer and organizer of the anti-Talmud movement, and in the outcome that gave the original Karaims’ religion (Kushul, S., 1996).
The principle dogma of Anan’s and his followers lay in the invariability of the laws given in the Old Testament, the laws that do not need to be commented or added. In this connection the need for constant and deep studies of the Bible was stressed, and this precisely was reflected in the word «Karaim». The stem of this word is derived from the Old Jew and the Arabic verb «Kara», which means «to read» (The Holy Writ). Anan is represented as a founder of Karaims’ laws, and his teaching is collected in the book «Code of laws». The Karaims believe the Bible to be the Old Testament, i.e. Torah, as well as the books of the Prophets and hagiographies. Of paramount importance is Decalogue, ten Commandments. This is the main ethic law of the followers of Karaizm. Along with Decalogue there are so-called «Ten dogmas of faith teaching». Anan believed in the immortality of the soul and its transmigration, denied all the rights of the clergy and admitted interpretation of the religious foundations. Anan’s teaching is similar to the teaching of the Arabic philosopher Basil ibn Ata – the founder of the Muslim sect of Mutazilites. But the most important fact in Anan’s teaching is his belief in the single indivisible God and the Revelations of the three prophets – Jesus, Mohammed and Moses (https://www.britannica.com/top-israel/Karaizm). Anan has its followers: Benjamin Nahavendi and Daniil al Kumucu, who lived in the 9th century in Iran. Abu Jusuf Jakub is considered one of the most important authors of the law-creating manuscripts of the Middle Ages. He lived in the first half of the 10th century in Egypt, and his main work is “The book of the luminaries and watching towers”, in which he rendered the Karaims’ laws.

Taking into consideration all mentioned above we can reconstruct the consequence of transformation of the Crimean Karaims’ religion. The part of the Karaevs, which was not numerous, took the fortress Kurk-Yer near Bahchisarai in the Crimea in the first century A.D. They founded their principality which existed till the 19th century. Through the local prose-lytes of the religion they either adopted the Biblizm, or they took it from the Altai, from their Turk tribesmen. However, the presence of the Aramaic print on the gravestones in Balta-Timez cemetery proves the supposition of the Karaims’ adoption of the Biblizm from the local people. The main part of the Karaevs who were in the Khazar Khaganate adopted the Old Testament as the state religion in 730 A.D. under the reign of the Khagan Bulan who kept the former faith in the God of Heaven-Tengri. Then in 799-809 A.D. under the KhaganObady the Turks strengthened their faith by the adoption of the Karaims’ religious teaching which was very close in its essence not only to the Biblizm but also to Islam and Christianity. It is worth mentioning that in that period there were several religions in the Khazars’ land: Islam, Christianity of the Nestorian type, shamanism and animistic beliefs.

It is precisely about those facts that the King Josef informed the Jewish high official Khasdai ibn Shafurit in his letter, telling him that the king Obady was a law-abiding and a fair man who strengthened the Kingdom and the faith according to the law and the rule (Reed, D., 2014).

The court of the Caliph al-Mansur (8th A.D.) declared Anan’s teaching (Karaizm) a new faith. The opinions of both the Orthodox Church and the Catholic Church were identical: both Churches considered that faith close to the Mohammedan faith, and several documentary sources testify to that fact. At the same time the Karai continued to believe in the God of the Heaven Tengri and the sacred oaths, they remained the Tengrians and shamanists despite the official adoption of the Karaims’ religion (Karai (krymskiekaraimy). Istorija, kul'tura, svjatyni, 2000).

6. The conclusions

On the grounds of the research given above it is possible to come to the following conclusions.

Though the last decades have testified a turn into the recognition of the ethnic authenticity of the Karaims and their religion, scientists still accentuate the ambiguity of both the ethnic origin of the Karaims and the roots of their religious beliefs. The valid understanding that might delete ideas and conceptions, which lead to the distortions and tendentious visions, lies in the field of the hermeneutic analysis of the historical texts.

The Crimean Karaims (Karai) were the Tengrians up to the first century A.D. together with the rest of the Turks. Then they adopted the pure Biblicism through the local peoples of the Crimea. After Anan’s teaching had come into existence in VIII A.D. they adopted Karaizm together with the rest of the Karai who were a part of the KhazarKhaganate. Anan’s teaching supplemented the Biblicism without changing its essence.

The foundation of the Karaims’ religion is the Biblicism. As the teaching of the Biblicism had come into existence 500 years before the appearance of the Judaism, the Karaims’ religion cannot be considered a sect of the Judaism.

Acknowledgement

The article is written in memory of Professor U. Barash, who was a highly-esteemed person and a true expert, not only in economics, but in history of the Karaims, his native and beloved people. Still for us, co-authors, there is something more: he was a dear father to T. Charkina, respected scientific supervisor to L. Martseniuk and a sample of professionalism to T. Vlasova.
References

